H.

H, ah'-tchay, Is not properly considered as a letter, but as a mere aspiration. Ch in cha, che, chi, is pronounced as in English. Formerly ch had sometimes the sound of k, as in chimico, chimera, chamelote; but the Spanish Academy has very properly fixed the pronunciation of all words in which they had the hard sound, by writing them as in químico, quimera, camelote. The moderns use h to soften the pronunciation of many words; as facer, fijo, are now written hacer hijo. For the same purpose it is placed before u, followed by e, in many words derived from the Latin; as huevo, from ovum, an egg; hueso, from os. The h is never sounded in the Spanish language, except by the common people in Andalusia, Extremadura, and the former Spanish possessions in America, where huevo, hueso, &c., are written and pronounced guebo (goo-ay'-bo), gueso, (goo-es'-so). The words in which h was preceded by a p, and took the sound of f, are now written as pronounced, thus; fenómeno, phenomenon. After r and t the h is entirely omitted, as in reuma, rheum, teatro, theatre; but it is retained, but not aspirated, in all words which originally began with h, or between two vowels; as honor, almohaza.
